The applications were selected using random number generator software, which can be viewed here.

This comes after an internal audit found that 6 previously selected applicants failed to meet the residency requirement established by the bright-line criteria and were ineligible to proceed. In July, the CCB contacted 8 previously undrawn applicants to determine if they wished to be entered into the random number generator selection event. All 8 applicants opted in.

The CCB is in the process of returning the $2,500 application fee to all social equity applicants who are not proceeding in the licensing process to mitigate financial burden.
